

business. But as he was going out (it might be for the support of our families; and though we sold my Lord, that we were brethren, the sons of the same father, in the land of Canaan, yet he took us for spies, and laid one of us in prison, and sent the rest home under promise of returning with our younger brother. And when we opened the sacks of corn, which we took from this country, behold! we found the money which we paid for the corn, in the mouths of our sacks. We do not know who put our money into the sacks; and though we are really innocent, yet we are afraid lest my Lord should apprehend and punish us, as those who have intentionally defrauded him." The steward having heard this mournful tale, desired they would be easy about the money; "For (saith he) I had your money for the corn; and as for that which you found in your sacks, it must be money which your God, in a miraculous way, has given you; therefore you need

business. But as he was going out (it might be for the support of our families; and though we sold my Lord, that we were brethren, the sons of the same father, in the land of Canaan, yet he took us for spies, and laid one of us in prison, and sent the rest home under promise of returning with our younger brother. And when we opened the sacks of corn, which we took from this country, behold! we found the money which we paid for the corn, in the mouths of our sacks. We do not know who put our money into the sacks; and though we are really innocent, yet we are afraid lest my Lord should apprehend and punish us, as those who have intentionally defrauded him." The steward having heard this mournful tale, desired they would be easy about the money; "For (saith he) I had your money for the corn; and as for that which you found in your sacks, it must be money which your God, in a miraculous way, has given you; therefore you need